Newsletter

From the State Director

I was unable to attend this year's MUFON Symposium in Seattle, but the videos have been ordered and I did get a written copy of the PROCEEDINGS. The lineup of speakers was very impressive.

We will begin a new season of six summaries from the thirteen speakers. It will be difficult to prioritize these as they are all worth reading. You are encouraged to obtain a copy of PROCEEDINGS - UFOLOGY: A SCIENTIFIC PARADIGM for $25.00 + $1.50 shipping from MUFON, 103 Oldtowne Rd, Sequin, TX 78155-4099.

We'll start with Commonalties & Disparities: Findings of the MUFON Abduction Transcription Project presented by Dan Wright. Dan has held several high-level positions within MUFON. In 1992 he resigned as Deputy Director of North American investigations and is now the Project Manager of the Abduction Transcription Project. He has obviously done an enormous amount of work on this project and exemplifies the effort needed to summarize and organize data into patterns.

One of the problems with UFO research is that many individuals go about collecting data and then use it to write books and make public appearances for profit. Only those of us who read just about everything can get a handle on the whole picture. The Transcription Project is an effort to bring the data together and typifies what MUFON is all about.

The study compiled dozens of characteristics across 142 cases submitted by fifteen researchers. Audio tapes of hypnosis sessions and interviews were submitted and MUFON volunteers transcribed them into written accounts. This is the broadest effort ever undertaken to study the nature and purposes of alien visitations. MUFON and the Fund for UFO Research (FUFOR) supplied a PC system for Dan and the project will continue as long as researchers submit tapes and volunteers are willing to transcribe them.

In fifteen cases there was precognitive foreknowledge that an alien intrusion would occur. This could happen up to a day in advance, but usually only moments beforehand. Often there was an accompanying tingling, buzzing, or vibration in the person's head, suggesting something electrical. In 34 cases the presence of an alien was sensed by the person despite no foretelling sight or sound, akin to the age-old perception of "just knowing" that someone lurks in that dark alley! In two cases, a ghostly presence forewarned an intrusion.

In 43 cases, the person was dazed during the event. Terms such as confused, disoriented, dream-like, dulled, and stunned were used. Most adults, and men especially, are kept in this state during the entire event. Wright suggested this might be used on because we have superior strength. The person is aware of surroundings but cannot react. (We have all heard the debunkers' dumb arguments about not bringing back an alien ashtray or other artifact. — Moss) Children are never controlled in this way. This maybe explains why adults who recall childhood abductions can give such a descriptive account.

Although the air was generally fresh, ... also noted were odors of sulphur, ozone, chemicals, sweet, bittersweet, or just plain unpleasant.

Being able to pass through windows and walls defies known physics, but nevertheless, this was reported in 45 cases. In 23 cases, aliens were observed to do this. In 31 cases, the subject was traversed through a window, ceiling or the like. It has been argued that this must involve the person being out-of-body. Yet OBE was experienced only when the person was on the examining table. However, OBE episodes can't explain how a person can both penetrate matter and later be physically touched, or worse.

Levitation has been the mode of choice for capturing people. In 75 cases, people said they were floated upwards. Most others had a blank recollection. Visible light was cited by 32 people as the method for entry into the craft. Many remarked that they could see their receding home and neighborhood through the beam. While most passed through an opening into the craft, in one case, the person penetrated the ship's exterior. Thirteen people reported being mentally compelled to simply walk to an isolated location and climb a ramp. In fact, in six cases, this was the sole means of capture across multiple abduction events. As for returning home, 7 individuals stated that a small capsule was used to transport them. The level of technology most certainly varies among the groups of aliens!

Regarding entity locomotion, some floated or glided — sometimes displaying the motion of walking. In 34 cases, the aliens actually did walk, sometimes gracefully and sometimes, awkwardly.

Many vehicle shapes and sizes were observed. Importantly, disc-shaped craft were observed in 27 of 43 cases that also involved any other vehicle type.

If we wonder about air quality aboard a ship, nearly all subjects stated they could breathe normally. Labored breathing was occasional, and was associated with not enough oxygen or too much humidity. None of the aliens were seen to have worn breathing apparatus or headgear. And no one felt an alien's breath or noticed lungs expanding and contracting. Although the air was usually fresh, in 24 cases, something unusual was offered. These included a burning sensation, sometimes from the person's own scorched flesh or hair, and once, emanating from a hybrid infant. Also noted were odors of sulphur, ozone, chemicals, sweet, bittersweet, or just plain unpleasant.

The examining room was typically circular. Seventeen cases reported a very large room, where other persons were seen entering and leaving in various states of dress — rather like a human processing plant. Some subjects were made to wait on a low bench. Small chairs were common. Many ceilings had metallic devices attached which were lowered as needed. A consistent feature was hallways curving gently in small ships, but straight, wide, and long in large craft.

Some rooms were bright and some dim. Thirteen persons encountered a bright examining room, then a more dim, recovery room or hallway. Self-illuminating walls were the norm; fixtures were also seen, and a surgical lamp was often present. The most common color in the rooms was white or metallic silver-grey. However, thirteen subjects reported that over a series of episodes, they had been in rooms of differing colors.

As to irregular settings, five people were convinced they were abducted in infancy and saw entities from a crib, playpen, or carriage. Dan commented that it strains credulity to suggest a toddler could distinguish a grey being from a stuffed animal. In fourteen cases, the individual ended up in a seemingly underground place with rocky walls and musty air quality.

Humans working with entities were observed. Sometimes a more structured facility with tile floors and standard doors was the setting — these were believed to be government sites.

Although most were paralyzed on the examining table, some were strapped onto it by various means, again suggesting that some groups have more advanced technology than others. In some cases, paralysis was induced by an alien touching the forehead, or by just pointing at it.

Sixteen subjects remarked on the fast pace of the exams as if time was of the essence. In 43 cases, the person was anesthetized by ingesting something, or by an alien's touch.

Again, the evidence suggests a difference in abilities. Even though anesthetized, some felt extreme pain. In 41 cases, the brain was scanned, probed with drilling instruments or needles, or laid open. Thirty received implants. Blood, tissue, bone marrow, and bodily fluids were also taken.

Only 81 of the 142 expressed fear during their experience. The others were perhaps familiar with the aliens through previous visits. Two-thirds were angry with the captors at some point and even argued with them occasionally. Eleven felt embarrassed or humiliated. Eight said they were happy to be in the entity's presence (perhaps a familiar being perceived as a lifelong, if not occasional, companion.) Three people were saddened to leave the ship and return home.

Entity numbers ranged from one to hundreds, depending on the situation. When tall entities were seen, they were usually in charge of the operation. Skin colors were described as white, grey, putty, bluish-grey, greenish-grey reptilian (bad news for the humans), greenish-brown, yellowish-grey, tan, brown and dark. Skin was described as smooth, shiny, moist, rough, reptilian scales, heavy pores, and wrinkled. The rough-skinned type were in charge more often than the smooth-skinned beings.

Most of entities were bald; some were blonde, two had thin, dark hair, and two were hairy simian types. Eyes were generally black, but other colors were seen, as well. Nine people described those with black eyes as having goggles covering the actual eyes. Others thought the eyes were filled with gel. Some reported the eyes as having a sclera (white part) or colored iris. In seven cases, the leader was said to have cat's eyes — a vertical slit pupil.

Fetuses in a tank and hybrids of various ages were seen by 31 of the subjects.

Various ear shapes and sizes were described, including no ear at all, indicating evolutionary development of telepathy. Other characteristics were described that are familiar, all indicative of the varieties visiting the planet. Exceptions to the usual stereotype alien include no nose at all and a short being who held its mouth open in an "O" with the gums visible! Although garments are often described, some types, like the "praying mantis," are naked.

Contrary to popular belief, aliens do display emotions such as anger when the person resisted an exam; fear toward humans who displayed psychic ability; sadness for the fate of humankind, and pride over the creation of a hybrid child. Love was sensed by 20 subjects; compassion sensed by 55. Fifteen reported the aliens considered the humans' plight to be humorous. A person's conduct or results of a procedure produced pleasure. Threats were made to people if they refused to cooperate. In five situations, a female alien showed compassion toward the humans when the leader issued threats.

The hybrid presence was typical. Fetuses in tanks and hybrids of various ages were seen by 31 of the subjects. One hybrid child, dressed in a simple gown, approached the subject and said matter-of-factly, "You are my mother." In some episodes where a woman was told to nurse a hybrid child, the "doctor" had earlier palpated the woman's breasts to presumably induce lactation, even though the woman was not pregnant.

Paranormal abilities were described. In three unusual cases, the subjects recognized their own hands as similar to those of a grey. They then assumed that their entire appearance had changed to alien. Two of these said that the ship was about to embark on an interdimensional flight for which the "vibration" of their bodies had to be altered. Sixteen subjects voiced the conviction that the entities are their true forebears. Does this lie at the heart of the abduction phenomenon?

Forty-five subjects noticed other humans in one episode or another.

Some saw the same people across multiple events. Perhaps, viewing others provides comfort and is done by the entities on purpose. (Remember Karla Turner's thoughts on virtual reality scenario described in a previous issue. Humans may not actually be present, even though the abductee thinks so — Moss) Down in the cavern described earlier, two subjects saw human physicians in hospital garb and surgical masks conducting surgery on them. One subject was able to read "NA" on the physician's identification badge. Another subject saw the entire acronym, "NASA." (More virtual reality? — Moss)

Wright sees a dichotomy among abductees. Most are used to produce offspring. A smaller group fares much better. They are told they are "special" with a future mission to perform. There is a marked disparity in evolution and technology across entity groups. These greatly disparate abilities seldom form an alliance.

In four cases, black helicopters were seen. Wright ends by saying that if our officialdom is actively involved with aliens, the only certainty is that mistakes will be made. And MUFON's Abduction Transcription Project will record them.

This was a tough presentation to summarize. I have never seen an article in which almost every sentence was important as in this one. It was hard to find anything that was irrelevant. Perhaps we will watch the video at some future time.

Dick Moss

A Convergence of Information... We're Starting to Get Somewhere!

*By William I. McNeff
Assistant State Director*

This is a summarization of a presentation, and comments on a second presentation from the 1995 MUFON Symposium which I was privileged to attend.

The first speaker was Katherina Wilson, a former resident of Pensacola, Florida, near which, of course, is located the city of Gulf Breeze. The area has had a large number of UFO sightings. Ms. Wilson is the author of The Alien Jigsaw (Puzzle Publishing). Written in journal style, it contains 119 abduction-related entries and 59 illustrations of beings, craft, medical instruments, and unusual scars. Wilson has undergone two psychological tests, two CAT scans and an MRI. Says Wilson, "...none of these tests detected anything wrong with me. Either we do not have the scientific tools to study this new "abduction syndrome" to establish that it is caused by a psychological abnormality, or abductions are really occurring."

Wilson emphasizes the importance of what she calls teaching dreams, a subject that many researchers have chosen to ignore. She says it is not a dream as we would normally define a dream, but is rather a particular type of experience that may occur during an abduction. During a teaching dream, an abductee is an active participant in the events the aliens choose to have her or him experience. During these experiences, aliens and humans have the opportunity to learn from each other. She told of her interactions with an alien she calls "The Blonde." The Blonde is not quite human-looking, is about six feet tall, and has blue eyes, but the pupils can contract to vertical slits. The Blonde, she says, has used her to show another group of aliens how important the concepts of the soul and eternal life are to humans and The Blonde. [Another "abductee/experiencer" whom I know personally told me of asking the aliens about death and being told "This is what death is like." He then found himself in another realm with feelings of security and happiness. In effect, he said, he was given to understand that there is no real death.]

Of especial interest, Wilson mentions (and sketches) a number of other types of aliens. One is "The Doctor" [Since he takes flesh samples, etc., it should be just as fair to call him "The Scientist." — WIM] whom she describes as humanoid-looking, with fair hair and always wearing a white lab coat. He is about five and one-half feet tall, has vertical pupils and no ears.

Another she calls the "Praying Mantis." This creature is roughly humanoid in shape but strongly resembles an insect, with a mantis-shaped head with large eyes. She stands about six feet tall and walks with a rocking motion. There is an entity she calls the "Type Four Grey" whom she also calls "The Diplomat," about seven feet tall and having a huge head and eyes. The Diplomat and the Praying Mantis walked in a similar fashion: They bent over slightly and their upper body rocked forward and backward in a coordinated manner with their legs.

Ms. Wilson recalls fourteen incidents which seem to represent military/government involvement. She writes, "Anyone who doesn't think our government could keep something as big as the UFO phenomenon a secret...hasn't read the paper for the past two years."

Wilson recounted some experiences which seem to illustrate recent theories in theoretical physics. Another speaker at the conference, F. Joe Lewells, Ph.D., presented theories along that same line (Quantum Physics Discovers the Holographic Universe). More about this in future issues.

Wilson concluded that the apparent alien-human hybridization program may be part of an ongoing process involving the evolution of Homo Sapiens. "A possible outcome may be the development of a new type of being who has human characteristics and can exist in a higher dimension."

Dan Wright presented "Findings of the MUFON Abduction Transcription Project" and Dick Moss' summarized account of these lengthy findings are very thorough. The recorded information seems to indicate that there are three (main?) groups of ETs:

1. A small, 3-4 ft tall being, grey to powder blue, no internal organs like ours.
Measurements of the brain indicate they are four times as intelligent as humans; they have divided brain cells;
2. A race of scientists;
3. A race of politicians (The Diplomats?).

The degree of agreement between these different sources is very interesting and may be significant. In the final analysis, the most significant evidence will be the agreement in details of accounts from hundreds of witnesses. The is why the MUFON Abduction Transcription Project is so important. Dan Wright made an important point: "The author does not believe and particular account, regardless of its detail or seeming veracity. The key to understanding all that transpires amid myriad encounters with multiple alien groups rests in documented repetition." (Italics are the author's.)

Minnesota Crop Circles

by Bob Schultz

This article is a continuation of my report included in the January MINNESOTA MUFON Newsletter, Issue #51, page 3. Two corrections are made to that issue: 1) Corrected date of my investigation to the Harold Smith farm was the 7th of October; 2) The article given to me by George Wingfield was from a Milan, Illinois newspaper

The Milaca, MN Crop Circle Report #33, dated January 31, 1995, has been published by Dr. William C. Levengood, Pinelandia Biophysical Laboratory, Grass Lake, MI.

Dr. Levengood's conclusions follow: "In this formation complex, the data provide very clear evidence that the rapid, thermal energy delivered within the formations was sufficient to alter the cell wall pit structures within the developing ears [of corn]. These changes were consistent within two independently obtained sample sets within matching sampling locations. ["R group" by Ms. Sally Rayl and "S group" by Mr. Robert Schultz]. The distribution of the energies throughout these circle formations appears to be very complex, a situation which is consistent with what has been documented in many other crop formations."

The full three page Report #33 can be obtained from BLT Research, Box 127, Cambridge, MA 02140. Please enclose a stamped self addressed business size envelope.

Blaine, MN Crop Circle

No report has been published yet on this most unusual crop circle. It is "unusual" because of the physical evidence left behind.

Dr. Levengood called me on 6/28/95 to tell me he had not forgotten this crop circle. He said, "That Blaine crop circle is very enigmatic. I'm still working on it. I haven't forgotten you, but there are so many very curious things going on here that I still haven't resolved all of them."

The physical samples submitted to Dr. Levengood included ears of corn, velvet leaf cockle burr weeds, white granules that were found on the ground near the center of the circle, yellow crystals beneath the white granules and magnetic material collected by dragging a magnet through the dirt.

The ears of corn show the same cell wall pit distortions as the Milaca crop circle. The weeds show a definite scrape mark on the side of each stalk. The yellow crystals are a natural organic resin — probably aromatic terpene. They were analyzed by using Energy Dispersive Spectroscopy (EDS) and are primarily composed of carbon with some oxygen, sulphur, sodium and silicon. They are not unusual, but why were they there beneath the white granules?

The really perplexing samples collected are the magnetite and white granules. Magnetite, Fe_3O_4 , is deposited on earth from space by meteoric material floating down through the atmosphere. The magnetite collected from within the circle is unusual. EDS results showed the magnetite to be very pure. Under microscopic examination, samples contain a high composition of little spheres from 2 to 100 microns in diameter. Normal magnetite particles are not as pure and are more irregular in shape. Dr. Levengood said, "I've been having people drag magnets over in England this year in the formations and no one has found any appreciable magnetic material yet — and you found a ton of it!"

The white granules are inorganic and most unusual. EDS results showed this material is composed primarily of Calcium with Silicon, Oxygen, Sulphur and Sodium. It dissolves readily in water. When the water evaporates, this material forms unusual corkscrew-like crystals. See below.

Due to the dark coloration of the background on the photo, printed reproduction could not be used.

Illustration by Dave Bell.

These crystals look similar to organic DNA chains. Dr. Levengood has never seen inorganic material grow helical crystals like this.

I'm sticking to my original theory that the physical evidence suggests a space ship.

(Bad) News From The Net

It has been reported that Sacramento-based psychologist and abduction researcher Dr. Richard Boylan was stripped of his license to practice in California. The revocation was based upon seven counts of gross negligence involving at least two patients. The board said the former president of the Sacramento Valley Psychological Association had "abused his role as a therapist when he imposed his personal views on the existence of extraterrestrials into the dreams and memories of two patients." Those charges include: imposing his views of space aliens into the dreams and memories of two patients; nude hot tubbing with patients; and bartering nude massages in return for psychological therapy... Boylan says the charges are false.

During a televised interview in Sacramento, Boylan stated "A number of my colleagues have felt that because I have been willing to look into a cutting edge field like extraterrestrial contact with humans that someone in authority was going to land on me one of these days." Boylan's only recourse now is legal action in Superior Court.

Schiff vs. GAO — Stumbling Along The Yellow Brick Road by "Interested Party"

At the request of Congressman Steve Schiff, GAO (General Accounting Office) conducted a records audit concerning the crash at Roswell, NM in 1947. Findings were released July 28, 1995.

This paper trail begins on July 8, 1947 with the RAAF (Roswell Army Air Field) public information office reporting the "crash and recovery of a flying disc" near Roswell. The next day the Commanding General of the US Eighth Air Force reported the disc to be a weather balloon.

In response to Schiff's inquiry regarding Majestic 12 (MJ12), GAO contacted the following agencies:

- * Information Security Oversight Office
- * Office of the Secretary of the Air Force
- * National Archives

The GAO also contacted the Harry S. Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower libraries. GAO was told they "found no records" in their files relating to MJ12; and they "found nothing" that appeared to fit the description of the MJ12 material or any references to this particular designation.

However, GAO reviewed a message dated 11/17/80 received from the public by the Information Security Oversight Office which appeared to have originated from the Operations Division of the Air Force Office of Special Investigations (AFOSI) that contained the words "MJ Twelve." When questioned about this, AFOSI claimed the message was a forgery.

In July, 1994, the Air Force disclosed its Report of Air Force Research Regarding the Roswell Incident. In the report, the Air Force conceded that something did indeed crash in Roswell, but that "the most likely source of the wreckage recovered was one of the Project MOGUL balloon trains."

Schiff suspected that the Dept. of Defense (DOD) was not fully disclosing information on the Roswell crash and asked GAO to identify government records concerning the crash as well as the requirements for reports on air accidents.

In answer to his request, GAO conducted a search for (classified and unclassified) government records regarding Roswell dating from July 1947 through the 1950's. The agencies queried were the FBI, CIA, NSC, and DOD.

With regard to the air accident requirements, GAO was informed that "Army regulations required that air accident reports be maintained permanently," [but] "there was no similar requirement to report a weather balloon crash."

GAO tried to find government records for military units assigned to RAAF in 1947. Searched were records of the 509th Bomb Group, the 1st Air Transport Unit, the 427th Army Air Force Base Unit and the 1395th Military Policy Company. There was an accounting for all records except those of the Military Policy Company. In fact, some government records concerning RAAF activities were entirely missing. "RAAF administrative records (from Mar. 1945 through Dec. 1949 and RAAF outgoing messages (from Oct. 1946 through Dec. 1949) were destroyed."

Only two reports were found: 1) the July '47 history report by the 509th Bomb Group and RAAF, noting the recovery of a "flying disc," and 2) an FBI teletype message dated July 8, 1947.

The teletype originated from the FBI office in Dallas and was sent to FBI headquarters in Washington as well as the FBI office in Cincinnati. It stated that a "hexagonal-shaped disc suspended from a large balloon by cable" resembling a "high-altitude weather balloon" had been recovered near Roswell and was being sent by special plane to Wright Field (Wright-Patterson AFB) for examination.

GAO reviewed the FBI's Cincinnati office records of the Roswell crash and found "no mention...of an airborne object near Roswell."

Upon reviewing the Air Materiel Command's records for that time period, GAO found "no records mentioning the Roswell crash or examination...of any debris recovered..."

No other government records reviewed by GAO mentioned the crash or recovery of an airborne object near Roswell in July 1947.

GAO queried numerous agencies about the Roswell crash and their various responses follow:

FBI: "All FBI data regarding the crash near Roswell had been processed under Freedom of Information Act requests previously received by the Bureau."

DOD: "The USAF report of July 1994,"...represents the extent of DOD records or information concerning the Roswell crash."

CIA: "...earlier searches by the CIA for records on unidentified flying objects produced no information pertaining to the Roswell crash." "...a search against the terms 'Project Mogul' and 'Roswell, New Mexico',...in all CIA databases produced no CIA documents related to the crash."

NSC: "The NSC has no records or information related to the incident at Roswell."

White House Office of Science and Technology: "OSTP has no direct knowledge of what occurred at Roswell and no records, except for the information received from the Air Force."

Department of Energy: "We conducted an in-depth search for documents related to the crash and have found no such documents."

If you're having a problem believing this chain of events, I am, too! Why would the Eighth Air Force (Ft. Worth, TX) get the FBI involved in the crash and/or recovery of a "weather" or "radar tracking" balloon?

Why would the FBI send said balloon to Wright Field for examination? What is there to examine?

Why did the FBI send "Urgent" teletype messages to Washington and Cincinnati about the incident? Why does the Cincinnati FBI have no record of this teletype?

How could the Air Material Command have absolutely no record of this incident if they were responsible for examining it?

If the object recovered in Roswell was indeed part of a "classified government project to determine the state of Soviet nuclear weapons research," why didn't the CIA know about it? It's hard to believe that the CIA wouldn't know about Project MOGUL.

It's too much of a coincidence that the RAAF administrative records and outgoing messages were destroyed, the Military Police Command records are missing and there is no record of an air accident report for this "classified government project," especially since it was important enough to get the FBI involved and the debris flown by special plane to Wright Field.

GAO turned up precious little regarding records of the crash and recovery that took place in Roswell on July 8, 1947. However, what they did expose is the massive cover-up about the incident.

The GAO Roswell report, with supporting documents, is available on the Internet via anonymous FTP.

Crop Circle in Iowa

Last week, on August 15, Bob and Elgene Kamper were surprised to discover a crop circle in the cornfield of their Arlington, Iowa (between Cedar Rapids and Dubuque) farm.

The "circle" measured 54 ft in a northwest, southeast line, and 60 ft in a northeast, southwest line. When the circle appeared is not known, and neither Bob nor Elgene remember hearing any strange sounds or seeing unusual lights. Farmers in the area, however, reported seeing red glowing balls floating down from the sky a few days prior to the discovery of the crop circle.

Pat Howard, MUFON investigator, and Kevin Randle, both residents of Cedar Rapids, drove to the Kamper farm to examine the circle. They report that the stalks on the outer perimeter are laid down facing the corn from without the circle, while the remainder of the stalks lay facing the center. Most of the stalks retained their green color but those nearest the center of the circle are brown, as if they had been heated.

Howard and Randle have not completed their investigation and have not made any official statements yet. They acknowledge that they found no footprints around the area of the circle, but have not ruled out the possibility of a hoax.

Although reports of the crop circle made the Des Moines newspapers, and ABC-TV newscasts in Des Moines and even Chicago, Twin Cities media ignored the incident (are we surprised?). News of the crop circle comes to us from Bob Schultz, Net Control Operator for MUFONET amateur radio when it was reported to him on Saturday, August 26.

Bob's been in touch with Howard, and has suggested that he contact Dr. Wm. Levengood at the BLT Research Lab for advice and procedures to gather soil and material samples in and around the circle.

We'll keep you informed as their investigation progresses.
